

The National Effective Parenting Initiative

6260 Laurel Canyon Blvd., Suite 304
North Hollywood, CA 91606

(818) 980-0903
(800) 325-2422
(818) 753-1054 Fax

www.EffectiveParentingUSA.org

The Five Critical Needs of Children

by Gerald Newmark, Ph.D.

On January 15, 2009, the Project Partners of the Uniting Los Angeles for Effective Project met to discuss ways to advocate, celebrate, and promote effective parenting and parenting education.

A main speaker at the meeting was one of the Projects newest partners, Gerald Newmark, Ph.D. author of How To Raise Emotionally Healthy Children. Dr. Newmark captivated the groups attention by outlining what he feels are the "Five Critical Needs of Children."

Here are Dr. Newmark's five critical needs and what he has to say about them.

1. Need to Feel Respected

Children need to feel respected. For that to happen, they need to be treated in a courteous, thoughtful, attentive and civil manner—as individuals, deserving of the same courtesy and considerateness as others. One of the best ways for children to learn about respect is to feel what it's like to be treated respectfully and to observe their parents and other adults treating each other the same way.

If we want children to grow up feeling respected and treating others with respect, we need to avoid sarcasm, belittling, yelling; we need to keep anger and impatience to a minimum; we need to avoid lying; we need to listen more and talk less; we need to command less and suggest and request more; we need to learn how to say "please," "thank you," "excuse me," "I'm sorry" — yes, even to children. We will try to cultivate these values in our children.

2. Need to Feel Important

Feeling important refers to a child's need to feel: "I have value. I am useful. I have power. I am somebody." This need is evident at a very early age. Pressing a button in an elevator — me, me. Children want to do things for themselves, and so often we get in their way.

Parents need to avoid being all powerful, solving all family problems, making all decisions, doing all the work, controlling everything that happens. Involve your children — ask their opinions; give them things to do; share decision-making and power; give them status and recognition; and have patience with mistakes when it takes a little longer or is not done as well as you could have done yourself.

If children do not feel important, if they don't develop a sense of value in constructive ways, they seek negative ways to get attention

The Five Critical Needs of Children / page 2

3. Need to Feel Accepted

Children have a need to feel accepted as individuals in their own right, with their own uniqueness, and not treated as mere reflections of their parents, as objects to be shaped in the image of what parents believe their ideal child should look like. This means that children have a right to their own feelings, opinions, ideas, concerns, wants and needs. Trivializing, ignoring, or ridiculing a child's feelings or opinions is a rejection which weakens the relationship. Paying attention to and discussing them, even when you do not like or disagree with what you are hearing strengthens the relationship.

4. Need to Feel Included

Children need to feel included. They need to be brought in, to be made to feel a part of things, to feel connected to other people, to have a sense of community. It happens when people engage with others in activities and projects, then they experience things together in a meaningful way. It is important for the family to create these opportunities. People who do things together feel closer to one another. Family activities offer a way to become closer and also to have fun, learn, and contribute to others.

5. Need to Feel Secure

Children need to feel secure. Security means creating a positive environment where people care for each other and show it, where people express themselves and others listen, where differences are accepted and conflicts are resolved constructively, where enough structure exists for children to feel safe and protected, and where children have opportunities to actively participate in their own evolution and that of the family – e.g. regarding discipline, establishing rules and consequences becomes a family activity.

You can purchase Dr. Newmark's book, How To Raise Emotionally Healthy Children: Meeting the Five Critical Needs of Children and Their Parents by going to <http://snipurl.com/newmark>.